SPEAKER'S BIO

BRADY ROBERTS

COMMISSIONER
FEDERAL MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION SERVICE

Brady Roberts was appointed Commissioner with the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (FMCS) on October 28, 2019. Brady is new to the labor relations field, having graduated with a Masters in Public Policy from the Harvard Kennedy School (HKS) in May of 2019. There, Brady was a Teaching Fellow for several negotiation and mediation classes for graduate-level coursework under Professor Brian Mandell. In this role, Brady developed coursework and taught negotiation and mediation skills to classes of up to 80 people at HKS. Brady also helped lead the organization effort for the Harvard Graduate Student Union-UAW during this time amongst Harvard graduate students. Prior to joining FMCS, Brady worked as a Negotiations Fellow with the Bloomberg Harvard City Leadership Initiative, where he wrote labor negotiations curriculum for mayoral executive teams.

Prior to graduate school, Brady worked as a policy consultant for the Department of Homeland Security and as a guidance counselor in Lancaster, Pennsylvania. He is active in the Philadelphia philanthropic community, serving as a mentor to Philadelphia high school students and currently lives in South Philadelphia with his fiancée.
